

CHAPTER EIGHT

What Humans Pass On

In The First Flame, the Spark Riders enter a strange underground chamber. Around them, scenes from the human past appear.

They see people making tools, planting seeds, building, repairing, caring for wounds, teaching children and passing knowledge from one person to another.

Saki realizes the chamber isn't just showing them history.

“This isn’t a museum,” she says. “It’s a handoff.”

How many things you know about because someone before you figured them out?

Fire • Tools • Farming • Building • Writing • Maps • Medicine • Music • Stories

1. Pick One

Choose one thing from the list above.

How do you think the first person figured it out?

How do you think other people learned from it?

2. Who Taught You?

Think of something you know how to do because someone taught you.

It could be how to:

cook something • ride a bike • care for an animal • draw • build something • play a game • use a tool

What did you learn?

Who taught you?

Could you teach it to someone else?

3. Your Turn

Imagine a kid 100 years from now could learn one useful thing from you.

What would you teach them?

Why would you choose it?

People have been passing knowledge from one generation to the next for thousands of years.

What will you pass on?
